

Freestanding Concealment Structures

Would a concealment structure introduce an element of charm to your cityscape?

Will it add a visual highlight to the rolling countryside?

Whether signal transmission equipment is located in urban or rural locations, a freestanding concealment structure could become your community showpiece.

From bell towers to clock towers, from crosses to lighthouses...or even ranger stations, your imagination – and ours – collectively push the untapped limits of traditional concealment structures. Endless variations ensure every custom concealment is a creative showpiece, crafted to either enhance an area or blend unobtrusively with the transmission site's immediate environment. Consider both natural and man-made surroundings in your targeted site area. A cutting-edge, modern, historically accurate, or even natural appearing concealment could be the perfect answer to addressing signal transmission challenges in a visually unspoiled location.

Like rooftop concealments, custom structures can be designed to allow for capacity expansions - to maximize the number of antennas concealed, now or later. Your ability to add carriers or retrofit with new technology in the future adds immediate long-term value.

Although custom concealment structures are arguably more expensive than other options... both initial investment and post-installation serviceability costs are heavily driven by your design, height and location choices. Your long term goals and budget will help you to determine if a custom showpiece is the best choice for your site.

Remember...advancements in wireless technology are increasing signal traffic, prompting wireless carriers to develop transmission sites where, historically, they were not required. As that happens, wireless carriers, site experts and STEALTH® will team up to provide transmission enhancements and an increased number of customized concealment solutions eagerly welcomed by town planners, zoning boards and the community at large.
